the three elements that concern me are:

1. collie uses bunbury as it's regional centre and many of those who work in collie commute from greater bunbury so if collie gets a cold bunbury has a flu. Only persons who have not lived in bunbury or collie would argue for collie being transferred to the agricultural region.

2. Metropolitan region Sent from my iPad

The rail and road connections to perth and the amount of residential development within the city of Mandurah and Murray shire and the southern extremities of the metro area and the number of their residents who work in the metro area and the planning commissions demographic forecasts makes them increasingly part of the metro area so ultimately the Mandurah , Dawesville and even Murray electorates. Are going to be metro seats while bunbury and busselton also maintain their population growth rates. Now seems to be the time to accept that one or more of these will be metro seats preferably with out changing the number of legislative councillors from the south west.

3 bunbury

The transfer of part of austrlind in Harvey shire into the electorate of bunbury at the last redistribution was incomprehensible as it meant crossing over the collie river. If bunbury needed change it should have been part of eaton in dardanup or that part of dalyellup east of parade road and north of Norton drive. subdivisions in glen iris and tuart park in the near future and higher density in bunbury will also help to maintain bunbury enrolments above quota .The part of eaton would be that bounded by estuary drive the perth bunbury highway Pratt road and glen Huon Drive. yours sincerely david smith 8picton crescent bunbury
