To whom it may concern,

How dare you try to say that urban people are more important than farmers by taking away a rural voice and giving it to urbanites. The city already has a higher percentage of representation in government than rural areas, and we are the ones that feed and clothe you. It is hard enough for us to be heard, and now you are trying to make it harder.

Labour got elected on the promise of funding for education, and one of the first things done once in power was take country funding and give it to the city. Do not continue to ignore us.

We stand firmly against the proposed boundary changes and the continued slight and blind eye Labour has for rural people.

Sincerely,

Kathryn Bricknell and Ben Short
